The Honorable William H. Webster
Central Intelligence Agency
Washington, D.C. 20502

Dear Bill:

Finally, after many, many years, those of us interested in Intelligence, are attempting to raise a small amount of money to get a museum started. It would contain the facts that we have on this subject. As you know, prior to World War II there was no Intelligence Agency in the United States. Now, we have one we can be very proud of. You can cuss it up and down, go around the bush with it, but I can tell you from years of experience, that we have a good system, in all of it's categories, spread all over this world.

We would like very much to have you serve on the Body. Not in a fund raising capacity, but to have your name, along with other leaders of the Senate and the House, indicating a general acceptance of such a museum.

I've accepted the Chairmanship of the project, The National Historical Intelligence Museum. Resolutions have been passed by the Senate and the House calling for the construction of this project. We are seeking, naturally, space in a GSA controlled building, so that will not amount to a great deal of money. However, there will be operating and moving expenses that we are not equipped to handle. Your acceptance of this would be a great personal favor, and do the drive an immense amount of good.

Sincerely,

Barry Goldwater

Mr. Terence C. Golden, Administrator
General Services Administration
18th and F Streets
Washington, D.C. 20405

Dear Mr. Golden:

The National Historical Intelligence Museum, of which I'm sure you have heard, has long been interested in acquiring the use of the building at 7th and D Streets. You have undoubtedly been approached on this matter several times. The group has now formally organized, and we are beginning to raise money. Therefore, I would like to have some opinion from you as to what we must go through in order to obtain the use of that particular building.

I am no longer in the Senate, of course, so I can't pick up the phone and call you. However, I would appreciate any information you might be able to give me.

Sincerely,

Barry Goldwater
